Re: United States v. Gary Davis, CR 13-950-JMF

Dear Judge Furman,

My name is Mate Tokay, and I am the Chief Operations Officer at Bitcoin.com, which formerly employed Gary Davis and is an internet company that provides various Bitcoin Cash-related service and products. Our flagship product is a digital wallet with more than 4.4 million users around the world. Bitcoin.com currently has around 100 employees, with about a third of them located in the United States.

I have known Gary for about three and a half years now. I am aware of the gravity of the crimes, and I am deeply saddened by his current situation.

Gary was one of the earliest team members to join Bitcoin.com and was an invaluable employee until he was extradited and incarcerated in the United States. It was a devastating loss to our team's productivity and moral when we lost Gary. That is why, on behalf of Bitcoin.com, I am offering Gary the opportunity to rejoin the company as a full-time employee in the capacity of Director of Customer Support as soon as he is released from custody.

Gary's skills undoubtedly benefit Bitcoin.com and the world at large. Moreover, the promise and stability of employment at a leading company within the ecosystem that Gary knows and loves will certainly provide him with purpose along with a way to support himself upon his release. I also understand that ex-convicted persons have a much lower chance of recidivism when they have steady employment lined-up upon release.

Given, among other things, Gary's sincere remorse and Bitcoin.com's standing offer for him to rejoin the company in a prominent role, I strongly believe that a lesser sentence is most appropriate in this situation.

Sincerely,

Mate Tokay
Chief Operations Officer
Bitcoin.com
